"I believe that I am a creative jeweller, who likes nice things and revels in technical challenges. This is why my creations are perfected in every way, not only their visible parts", Swiss fine jeweller Nadia Morgenthaler says. Although not nearly encompassing all of her talents, this quote sums it all up. How to reconcile beauty with complexity is her preoccupation, and as for any accomplished artist, this stems from an ebullient imagination. The whole creative process (design and making) is what occupies her mind and time in her quest to achieve perfection. Although subjective in regards to aesthetics, this notion can certainly be measured when it comes to quality, and there, Morgenthaler shines. At the helm of her own atelier, one of the most skilful in dealing and experimenting with the many challenges of high jewellery, she along her colleagues, incessantly breaks out of the mould. Behind the romantic softness of her current creations (although she eagerly points out that this is not set in stone as her aesthetics are not bound to one single concept) resides the utmost level of craftsmanship, alongside sophisticated pastel hues, ingenious mixing of metals, and rare natural pearls. This list of exquisite attributes defines the essence of Morgenthaler's creations, jewellery with the hallmarks of haute joaillerie minus the often-intimidating aura attached to it.
